This comment relates to the Durham/Orange County (NC) Light Rail project. I object to the planned Farrington Road ROMF facility because it is too smal—and poorly shaped for the purpose. The site's awkward shape forces trains to execute 90 degree turns as they are moved around the the site, causing extremely loud track squeal noise at all times of day and night. Moreover, the site lacks room for expansion. The light rail can only make sense as part of a denser rail network. Yet the proposed site will be at capacity even as it handles the rolling stock of a single 17 mile track.
